MEAL TIME

WEEK 1:

Ask a kid: Think about your friends. How are you alike and how are you different?

Ask a parent: When was a time you accepted by someone who was very different than you? How did that make you feel?

WEEK 2:

Ask a kid: What do you think you're more likely to regret: choosing what you want to do, or choosing to be there for a friend?

Ask a parent: What's the most thoughtful gift you've ever received from a friend?

WEEK 3:

Ask a kid: Encouragement can be cheering on someone who is doing well, or cheering up someone who's going through a hard time. Which one do you think is easier to do, and why?

Ask a parent: How is jealousy the enemy of encouragement?

WEEK 4:

Ask a kid: When was a time you found a friend in someone you thought you had nothing in common with?

Ask a parent: What do you stand to gain by having friendships with people who are different from you?

PARENT TIME

Anyone else have a daily checklist? Sometimes it's written down and sometimes it's all in our heads, but many of us have a list of things that need to get done for us to feel like we've accomplished something that day. The checklist is very helpful for completing projects or chores. But have you ever tried to "checklist" your relationships with your family members? Doesn't work very well ... and it's a sure sign you're a task oriented person (like me).

So how do we become less task-oriented and more relationship-oriented, especially in relation to our spouse and kids? To hear one Type-A's story and learn 5 tips for valuing people more, download this month's Parent Link Live podcast on www.OrangeParents.org.
